MONTHLY COMMENTARY

What happened in financial markets?

Global equities were broadly unchanged in January, returning less than 1%. However, there were some notable shifts beneath the surface with the technology sector gaining 3% after reporting strong earnings. The healthcare sector also outperformed. Energy and mining companies underperformed in response to weaker global demand, led by China. Japan was the strongest regional market, followed by the US. Asia ex-Japan was the worst performing region, dragged lower by China's woes. Small cap lagged again.

Global bonds gave up some of their recent gains, falling by 0.5%, as financial markets saw the prospect of a US rate cut in March slip away in response to better economic data. The Fed also reiterated its desire to see inflation falling sustainably to 2%, before it was confident it could lower interest rates. Stronger than expected UK inflation saw gilts underperforming US government bonds, whilst European bond yields also shifted higher.

Rising geopolitical tensions pushed oil prices 6% higher, with global shipping routes being impacted by Houthi attacks on ships in the Red Sea. The US and UK responded by launching strikes on targets in Yemen. In response to higher bond yields, listed infrastructure fell 3% and listed real estate fell by 4%.

What is the outlook?

With inflation falling sharply across developed markets, central banks are well on their way towards their 2% inflation targets. However, there are some risks developing which may delay further disinflation progress. Shipping is being disrupted by attacks in the Red Sea, despite the intervention of the US and UK militaries, and companies are warning that higher freight costs may eventually show up in higher goods prices. In addition, there are signs that manufacturing activity is bottoming out in Europe, and reaccelerating in the US.

In recent weeks we've also had some pushback from central banks with respect to the number of interest rate cuts priced in for this year. Labour markets remain robust, wage growth is slightly higher than desired, and economic activity has remained resilient. The mindset therefore remains that they would rather err on the side of keeping rates too high for too long, especially after presiding over a period of high inflation over the past two years. The obvious risk with this approach is that by the time inflation is back to target, it may be too late to prevent a major slowdown or financial accident.

However, estimates of US GDP growth for the end of last year suggest that the US economy is a long way from recession. This has provided some comfort for equity markets, as has the current US earnings season. A continuation of this disinflationary growth environment should benefit both bonds and equities, which makes us wary of holding too much cash, despite higher interest rates.
